LOCATION

Huntingdon is a historic market town located in Cambridgeshire, within the East of England. It sits approximately 60 miles north of London and around 20 miles northwest of Cambridge, giving it a strategically advantageous position for both regional and national connectivity.

Huntingdon has an expanding population of approximately 24,000 and benefits from strong transport links. It is positioned at the intersection of key road routes, including the nearby A1307 (formerly part of the A14), providing convenient access east-west across the region. Rail services from Huntingdon Railway Station offer direct connections to London and other major centres, supporting its role as a modern commuter hub.

Glebe Road is accessed via St Peter's Road which is an established commercial area and has good access to the A141 and A14.
