LOCATION

Burts Bar lies just south of the town centre on Randolph Street, south of its junction with Church Street and just north of Victoria Road. Buckhaven is a historic coastal town located on the south-eastern edge of Fife, Scotland, on the northern shore of the Firth of Forth. It sits between the neighbouring settlements of East Wemyss to the west and Methil to the east, forming part of the wider Levenmouth conurbation. Once a small fishing village, it developed significantly during the industrial era due to coal mining and remains part of the vibrant industrial and residential area in southern Fife, approximately 10 miles (16 km) east of Kirkcaldy and 35 miles (56 km) north of Edinburgh.

The town has a resident population of approximately 4,400 (2020–2022 figures), with the broader Levenmouth area (including Methil, Leven, and surrounding communities) supporting around 37,000 people. This provides a solid local catchment for retail, services, and leisure. Transport links are convenient: Buckhaven benefits from regular bus services connecting it to Leven, Methil, Kirkcaldy, Glenrothes, St Andrews, and Edinburgh. The nearest railway station is at Cameron Bridge (a short distance away), offering services towards Edinburgh and beyond, while the A915 and A955 provide good road access to the rest of Fife and the central belt. This makes Buckhaven a well-connected and practical location within the Fife region.
